Dr Kako Mayumi

Dr Kako Mayumi who works at Hiroshima University. She had nursing education at Kobe City College of Nursing, and four year of clinical work experience at medical and neurosurgical ward in Kobe Nishi Medical Centre in Japan. With her great curiosity studying in English, she gained from the Bachelor of Nursing (bridging course to be a Registered Nurse in Australia) to doctoral degree at Flinders University, South Australia. Since she had experience in the 1994 earthquake in Kobe during her clinical work in her hometown, her interest had been with disaster nursing and health. Through her other work experience such as working as a consultant in WHO Kobe Centre and community voluntary work after the earthquake as a nurse, she strongly believes the importance of communication to plan from non-disaster period with various sectors to create the resilient community. Dr Kako has experience in collaborating internationally working with the countries such as Australia, Bangladesh, Indonesia, Türkiye, USA and many others. She also works with the domestic local organizations such as community disaster risk reduction officers and volunteers. The recent work completed is to evaluate the public health care system by utilizing the scorecard. Her research interest develops to strengthen the network between community care facilities and stakeholders who are benefitted from those facilities. She also believe that it is critical to work with them to support the system and network not only during the disaster period but also work from the non-disaster time period.
